PUBLIC COMMENT

Judy Rhodes – 3008 Sparta Street, West Lafayette- Ms. Rhodes said it is the 10 year anniversary since the Council imposed a special income tax in Tippecanoe County called the Homestead Credit to offset the effect of the elimination of Inventory Property Tax. The Homestead Credit raised taxes in Tippecanoe County 10% - a .01 bump. The tax was based on personal property assessment 2006 – pay 2007. The numbers were frozen. The basis of the tax depends on the economic situation of Tippecanoe County inventory in 2006. The allocation of the Homestead Credit had unintended results and the distribution formula was modified a year later. A proposal was made to reduce the rate due to the excess collected. Members of the Council, which included Councilmember Vernon and Commissioner Murtaugh, felt more tracking was needed before further action was taken.

Ms. Rhodes continued saying she is asking for a review of the Homestead Credit tax before further taxes are imposed by Council and the County. An advantage in terms of research is that Auditor Plantenga was the Auditor when the tax was imposed. A tax based on 2006 doesn't make sense; the economy is so different. She requested the Council undertake a review of the tax saying it is early enough in the year there is time to move ahead.

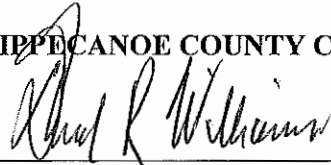

Auditor Plantenga added in 2006 there was $332 million of inventory in Tippecanoe County. He recalls that businesses were to declare inventory each year and it would be exempted off. After the first year, there were enough problems of people not doing that, the General Assembly changed it to not being on the form. The idea was to know the amount of inventory in the county every year. Once it was not declared on the tax return, we were forced to use the last known numbers from 2006. The current inventory is much different than it was in 2006. Inventory Homestead was based on where the inventory was at that time. For example Lafayette inventory was quite high and West Lafayette didn't have (nor do they today) much inventory and the Homestead tax is lower. A hybrid method was used based on where the inventory was located to neutralize the impact of the $332 million of assessed value going away. We are stuck with using numbers that are ten years old and invalid but there is nothing else to use. Auditor Plantenga said the Homestead Credit percentage is calculated annually.

President Williams said Council will want to take a further look prior to budget time, thanking Ms. Rhodes for bringing forth the issue. Councilmember Vernon suggested a committee, possibly including Ms. Rhodes, should review. Councilmember Winger said he and past Councilmember Gutwein visited the issue and met with past Auditor Weston a number of times in the past – it is a complicated task. He agrees a committee is a wise first step. Auditor Plantenga said we should look at not only should we have it but also if we want to keep it, what form. Since the numbers are old, would we want everybody receiving the same percentage credit? President Williams said the Revenue Committee will work with Auditor Plantenga for a recommendation.

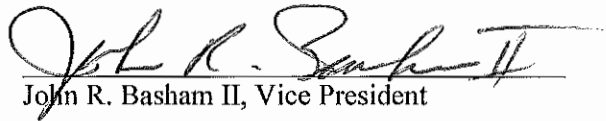

As there were no additional Public Comments, Councilmember Basham moved to adjourn.

Meeting adjourned at 9:11 a.m.
